

Senior School and Post-Secondary Transitions

Being inclusive of students from refugee and migrant backgrounds: What can your school do?

Listen

- Take time to learn about the unique needs, interests and aspirations of students.
- Start conversations about senior school study and post-secondary transitions early.
- Understand the experiences of refugee and migrant background students and their families.
- Use professional interpreters to listen and respond to the concerns and needs of families. All Government schools are able to access interpreting and translation services via All Graduates.

Support

- Offer as much one-on-one guidance and transition support as possible.
- Determine students' visa status and what access they have to student loans for tertiary course entrance.
- Provide translated vocabulary lists and other resources to students and families explaining the language of transitions.
- Support students to pursue alternative pathways to university by connecting them with TAFE and other bridging courses.
- Include Multicultural Education Aides and wellbeing staff in the planning and support of transitions.
- Develop school-wide policies and practices that promote equity in transitions.

Empower

- Guide students to select subjects that support their strengths and aspirations.
- Organise opportunities for students to engage with peer mentors who have experienced senior school and post-secondary transitions in Australia.
- Provide opportunities for students and families to become familiar with different professions and career pathways e.g. organise visits to TAFE and university campuses.
- Work with Multicultural Education Aides and/or professional interpreters to run career information sessions for families.
- Identify external programs and supports available to assist students in achieving their goals e.g. explore university scholarship opportunities and VET programs.
